Insect and Bird Connections

Thursday, April 3, 2008 : 7:00 P.M.

River Bend Nature Center

3600 N. Green Bay Rd. - Racine

Kerry Katovich is an assistant professor in biology at the UW-Whitewater. His primary research focuses on a large group of mostly South American scarab beetles. He currently has several students working on several local groups, including a study trying to document and identify Wisconsin's Robber Flies, The Assassin bugs, Lace bugs and Leaf-footed bugs of Wisconsin. At Whitewater he teaches invertebrate biology, evolution, animal physiology, animal diversity and ecology to the biology majors.

Kerry grew up in central Wisconsin and was taken by insects at an early age. His father was a state forester, and it was through him that he learned to appreciate the outside world. One of his earliest memories is going on the annual Sandhill Crane count with his dad and brothers.

Kerry will demonstrate some obvious and not so obvious connections between birds and insects in his talk.

Needed: Citizen Monitors for Wisconsin's First Salamander Survey

The Wisconsin Audubon Council, Inc. (WAC), a coalition of the state's 14 independent chapters and 2 National Audubon centers, received a grant from the Citizen-Based Monitoring Network of Wisconsin to coordinate a statewide survey of salamanders. Volunteer monitors will place live traps in local wetland sites that experts have identified as potential breeding habitats and will check the traps daily over a two week period in early April and enter their catch results on a data sheet.

Wisconsin has seven salamander species. The survey focuses on four species that breed in shallow woodland pools: the tiger, spotted and blue-spotted salamanders and the central newt. This survey brings attention to these secretive creatures, gives wildlife managers much-needed distribution data, and promotes the value of wetlands and woodland pools. According to Randy Korb, WAC president and project director, willing participants must belong to or join an Audubon chapter to become a salamander citizen monitor. If you are interested in becoming a volunteer salamander monitor and receive web-based or workshop training, please contact Rick Fare at 262.632.7585 or rick.fare@hoyaudubon.org
